The Roaring Twenties

FRIDAY OCTOBER 4, 2019 8:00

BMOP
The Roaring Twenties

FRIDAY OCTOBER 4, 2018 8:00
JORDAN HALL AT NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY
PRE-CONCERT TALK AT 7:00

JOHN ALDEN CARPENTER  Krazy Kat (1922)

JOSEPH SCHILLINGER  First Airphonic Suite (1929)
Carolina Eyck, theremin

DALIT WARSHAW  Sirens: A Concerto for Theremin and Orchestra in Three Movements (2017)
I. Clara’s Violin
II. Ulysses
III. Fugal Horn
Carolina Eyck, theremin

INTERMISSION

KURT WEILL  Little Threepenny Suite (1931)
1. Overture
2. The Moritat of Mack the Knife
3. The Instead-Of Song
4. The Ballad of the Easy Life
5. Polly’s Song and Tango-Ballad
6. Cannon Song
7. Threepenny Finale

JOHN ALDEN CARPENTER  Skyscrapers (1926)

GIL ROSE, conductor

Welcome to New England Conservatory’s Jordan Hall.

New England Conservatory is home to acoustically superb Jordan Hall, where you’re seated now. Welcome, and enjoy the performance!

NEC is also the oldest independent music school in the United States, home to musical innovators across our College, Preparatory School, and School of Continuing Education.

From chamber and orchestral music to jazz to Contemporary Improvisation, it’s all right here at NEC.

Join us for a concert, take lessons, or join an ensemble: necmusic.edu
THE ROARING TWENTIES

The Twenties were a time of great social change. As 2019 comes to a close (during an election year, no less), we find ourselves immersed in palpable divisiveness. As in the Twenties, current American opinion still differs violently on the particulars of racial equality, women’s rights, drug legality, and political integrity. All in all, we can relate. We are still experiencing the great eternal American struggle between personal freedom and institutional power, between law and crime, between state and federal governments, between concepts of individualism and collectivism.

While these conflicts may hold a certain romance or nostalgia for Americans, the wounds of the Twenties were felt as deeply then as we feel our own now. Happily, many like-minds were able to find each other, to resist the status quo, and to innovate and bring forth new styles and creative movements. Artists’ efforts culminated in innovations in Expressionism, Surrealism, and Art Deco, as well as new affiliations like Bauhaus, Dada, or Die Blaue Vier.

If these similarities bind together our predicaments across the gulf of time, perhaps it is not so much the historical facts of the Twenties in themselves that should fascinate us. Perhaps we should put our attention more on the essence of the period’s collective pattern-seeking, how our forebears found their own meaning in the madness of their epoch. The essence of the Twenties is so close to our own, even after a hundred years we may remain too close to their culture.

The following notes for this evening’s music therefore attempt to navigate an anamorphic view of the Twenties, a glance back over the shoulder from where we are at what we were before the plunge.

JOHN ALDEN CARPENTER (1876-1951)
Krazy Kat, a Jazz Pantomime (1922)

Creator of Krazy Kat, George Herriman was nicknamed “the Greek” by fellow cartoonist Tad Dorgan. His mixed-race Créole background being a secret—even possibly to himself to an extent—Herriman was often mis-identified as French, Irish, or Turkish to explain away his complexion and “kinky hair,” which he admitted to friends that he often hid with a hat. Only in 1971 did a sociologist publicly confirm Herriman’s hidden heritage, Arthur Asa Berger having discovered that a birth certificate obtained from the New Orleans Board of Health gave the cartoonist’s race as “colored.” George Herriman’s family hailed from the Tremé neighborhood in New Orleans, historically a racially mixed area where many free people of color settled. It was a site for the early abolitionist movement, the (in)famous “Back of Town” known for its vibrant culture, especially that of live music and as the birthplace of jazz. But when the failure of the Reconstruction era became apparent in the light of increasing Jim Crow oppressions, Herriman’s father moved his family to Los Angeles

CHORUS

SOPRANO
Alecia Batson
Melynda Davis
Kristin Fahning

TENOR
Joel Edwards
Jeremy Ayres Fisher
Wes Hunter

FRAN DANIEL LAUERICA
ELJI MIURA
CONNOR VIGEANT

CONDUCTOR
CLIVE GRAINGER
when George was nine years old. Seemingly, this was when George Herriman started passing as white, perhaps a reinvention of their family in the face of institutional racism.

With these complex identities at the heart of his creativity, Herriman perhaps went over many readers’ heads, and his loudest fans were often made up of intellectuals, artists, and critics. T. S. Eliot, Langston Hughes, E. B. White, and E. E. Cummings, to name a few; Cummings being pivotal in creating the first anthology book of Krazy Kat upon Herriman’s death.

Indeed, Herriman’s legacy lived on well after his death, influencing many comic-book creators that take on the passed torch, artists such as Charles Schulz, Robert Crumb, Art Spiegelman, Bill Watterson, and Chris Ware. But as a musical work, Carpenter’s Krazy Kat suffers a similar fate as George Herriman’s work. Albeit unspeakably influential, both artists have been somewhat eclipsed by the refinement of the very stylings that they had helped create for their respective mediums.

Herriman’s Krazy Kat strip debuted in 1913, running some decades until the artist’s death in 1944. The comic revolves around three primary characters—Krazy Kat, Ignatz the mouse, and Offisa Pupp—positioned in a curious and mystifying love triangle. Krazy loves Ignatz, whose sole joy in life is to throw bricks at Krazy. (Oh, unrequited love!) This violence Krazy mistakenly takes as signs of affection, complete with floating hearts upon impact and swooning dialect-heavy declarations of his “Lil’ Ainjil.” Offisa Pupp, in love with Krazy, attempts to stop Ignatz. Because here’s the kicker with Krazy: their gender is fluid, switching between “he” and “she” as Herriman saw fit. Knowing Herriman’s occluded background, it is hard not to see the artist’s own dual-status as a white-passing minority in his depictions of Krazy’s gender fluidity. The transgression of crossing these boundaries, the pressures of oscillating between cultures, the schizophrenic identity-split of code-shifting between worlds, must have taken its toll on Herriman and seeped into his art.

While not quite as “fast and wacky” as Carl Stalling’s zany scorings for Warner Brothers’ Looney Tunes, Carpenter’s ballet plays like the prototype to the following generations’ cartoon music of the Thirties. However, Carpenter’s tone is far from nihilistically frantic, often evoking a warm, hopeful nonchalance. Clever, but not too clever to be off-putting. In essence, the composer’s craft can be somewhat well hidden, never coming off as too showy. The music of Krazy Kat may unfold episodically enough, but from moment to moment the gestures never stand still for too long, always getting up to hijinks like Krazy and his pals. Musical gesture transforms quickly into another and another, capturing the proto-surreal character of Herriman’s original drawings. In this way, Carpenter’s orchestral writing is analogous to the way that Herriman’s style would play with poetic language, relying on colorful dialects and multilingual puns, or would draw the eye with daring illustrative design, where each strip had its own unique logo and particular panel layout to fit the setting of each story. Like a Bauhausian form-meets-function in Herriman’s work, Carpenter’s steady hand also controls the music in similar aplitom. There is a kind of fluidity to Carpenter’s jazz pantomime, oscillating between musical ideas in the same way that Herriman’s comic-strip character plays with entendre and irony, rarely at the expense of the reader’s or listener’s pleasure of the work.

The character of Krazy Kat seems more relevant than ever in light of our culture’s recent grappling with non-dualistic gender identities. Krazy seems to self-identify as what we would now call non-binary, freely alternating between “him” and “her” and refusing to be pinned down. For example: When confusing an owl-caller at their door as to whether the Joseph Schillinger (1895-1943)
First Airphonic Suite (1929)

Joseph Schillinger’s First Airphonic Suite, written for inventor-musician Léon Theremin, must have been quite the happening. Like a mystifying demonstration of electrical current at the turn of the century by Nikola Tesla, one can imagine there must have been enough anticipation in the hall that it felt like there was “electricity in the air.” Premiered in 1929 by the Cleveland Orchestra with Theremin himself as soloist under the baton of Nikolai Sokoloff, this was the first piece for theremin and orchestra. One hopes that Schillinger and Theremin, both Russian-born and American emigrates, must have found some solace in working together.

If First Airphonic Suite sounds a bit like film music to us, that should come as no surprise. It was in the Twenties that the film industry truly took hold, a cinema revolution, as composers began to stray from the concert hall to score music for this new artistic medium. The Suite opens with the sinuously snaking lines of a bassoon duet, coiling in their ominous lower range before the theremin soloist fades in on a simmering melancholic & noir feeling, only deepening the dark urban atmosphere when the brass join to support.

The rest of the Suite unfolds in three large sections. This first lament, the second more lively “factory line” section, and the third that is a synthesizes of the two. Further along the lines of Lang’s Metropolis, we may recall the movie’s tag: “There can be no understanding between the hands and the brain unless the heart acts as mediator.” The theremin, with its touchless technique, may be our heart here, mediating between human despair and mechanical production. Fittingly, Metropolis mirrors a quote by Henry Ford, inventor of the “Tin Lizzie.” Ford held that “[c]oming together is a beginning, staying together is progress, and working together is success.” Schillinger, despite being the first to attempt writing a piece for this unique instrumentation, has succeeded in delivering the ghost to the machine by baking a narrative of unification directly into his landmark Suite.

Schillinger’s legacy lives on today, albeit not as often in the concert hall as he perhaps deserves. He produced many fine students; notably, George Gershwin, who wrote Porgy and Bess while studying with him. But Schillinger is probably best-known for systematizing his compositional method into a pedagogic tool, which he called the Schillinger System. Having passed on his System to an ample group of students, one in particular became a teacher of the new method. Lawrence Berk would go on to found a music school in Boston to continue Schillinger’s teachings. Schillinger House, founded in 1945, operated for a decade before transforming in the Berklee College of Music in 1954. There, the Schillinger method was used in Berklee’s curriculum until the early 1970s.

DALIT WARSHAW (b. 1974)
Sirens: A Concerto for Theremin and Orchestra (2018)

The theremin featured in Dalit Warshaw’s Sirens is indeed a unique instrument, created by Lev Sergeyevich Termen, better known as Léon Theremin upon emigrating to the States. Theremin was a bit like Twenties contemporary Edgar Varèse, a mad scientist of a composer that was obsessed with the intersection of industry, noise, and music. Before the Russian revolution, Theremin had studied both electrical engineering and music, combining scientific know-how with aesthetic creativity. Notably, Theremin arrived at the epiphany for his new electronic instrument while experimenting with an “electric watchman” burglar alarm system when he noticed how it used the natural electrical capacitance of the human body. He could make sound this way, which meant he could make music without even touching his new instrument. The first prototype of the theremin was unveiled in 1920 and, after being successfullydemoed for Lenin himself, went on tour touting Soviet technological ingenuity. It is an instrument of class mobility, one that shirks the pedagogic model of the conservatory.

The Twenties definitely saw a lot of mobility on a whole. Feminist thinking was also on the rise, and women’s suffrage was a much fought-over battle. Finally, on August 18th, 1920, the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution granted American women the right to vote. With their new found freedom, women began to cross the gender line. Flappers, liberated women who drank, smoked, and carried on in the same way that men enjoyed, became more prevalent. Yet, women composers were not exactly common. Clara Rockmore, who was Warshaw’s teacher and mentor, shows the Twenties as a time when women were becoming more common as performers. It makes sense then for this woman composer to write for an instrument first championed by a woman, as both a personal and historical hommage.

Note from the composer:
I first met theremin virtuoso Clara Rockmore when I was a very young girl, during one of my frequent visits to her sister, the brilliant pianist Nadia Reisenberg. Nadia was a significant mentor during my early musical development as a pianist and composer, until her passing in 1983. When I first heard Clara play theremin, I was immediately struck by her incomparable tone that suggested a sonic mélange of violin and voice merged with the otherworldly. My affinity for the instrument led Clara to begin teaching me in 1991, when I was 16 years old, inviting Bob Moog to study her theremin (custom-built for her by the inventor, Leon Theremin) so that he could build a replica for me, my Moog 91W model.

Upon Clara’s death in 1998, I resolved to realize her vision of the theremin’s admitance onto the roster of serious classical instruments, by creating for it a repertoire of art music that would reveal its hidden yet innate expressive potential and highlight the many various potential dramatic and technical facets of the instrument, aside from more obvious novelty effects such as large multiple-octave glissandi, heavy vibrato.
The theremin has many paradoxical qualities. It is an electronic instrument, yet can sound profoundly musical, even human. While it is the forerunner for so many subsequent technological inventions ranging from high security alarm systems to the synthesizer, it also remains the electronic instrument most sensitive to human presence, despite the fact that it is played without being touched. Playing the theremin presents its highly unique challenges and marvels, among them dealing with its imaginary, fluctuating aerial fingerboard (for which having absolute pitch is preferable). Also, dynamics and articulations are achieved inversely, as the default state of the instrument—when at rest—is sound, the hand carving away at its negative space much like a sculptor chisels at stone, through interference within the electromagnetic field. To perform the theremin as the inventor intended was to imprint the human musical capacity and technique onto the non-human: it was to lend soul to a machine.

Movement I: “Clara’s Violin”
The fascinating tale of this instrument, its inventor, and the various historical personalities involved in its development begged to be addressed through music. The first movement of Sirens, entitled “Clara’s Violin,” highlights Clara’s deep and early relationship with the violin that was then sublimated into her theremin playing. It is also a musical depiction of Clara’s own personal and musical story, the narrative created through an interaction of leitmotifs derived from the names of the related characters and the instruments they played. In addition to the leitmotif for Clara Rockmore, included are the inventor (and her suitor) Leon Theremin, her sister Nadia (invoked, alongside another leitmotif derived from the word “piano,” in the lilting evocations of pianistic Romanticism in the first movement), her violin, her theremin (also the basis of a “Thera-fugue” in the last movement), even the KGB (responsible for the mysterious and sudden kidnapping of Theremin from his New York apartment by the Soviets in 1938).

The piece begins from the depths, as the theremin emerges in slow glissando from a smoky orchestral drone of low B, alighting upon certain notes punctuated by pizzicato in the orchestra, like sparks among embers. The following names arise from the dark: “CLARA” (B-G#-A-D-A, the first—and foremost—leitmotif to unfold), “ROCKMORE,” along with the musical iteration of my own name. A crescendo leads to an arrival on C# (spanning a three-octave leap), and the proclamation of the leitmotif “THEREMIN.” A waltz wanders in, a second theme based upon Clara’s name. Her sister, “NADIA,” puts in an appearance, along with her instrument, “PIANO,” as theremin and piano play a duet, in tribute to the sisters’ close relationship and collaboration.

The beginning of the development section marks a return to the opening abyss, in which the earlier leitmotifs are further explored, ultimately leading to the appearance of the “KGB” leitmotif, as it happens, represented aptly by a bleak Ab minor triad. From the depths of the “KGB,” the theremin commences its cadenza (also entitled “The Emergence”), an emotive exploration of previous material. After the theremin gives up its ghost, “Clara’s Violin” theme returns once again, as a duet with the piano prominently figured, although the solo violin has taken the theremin’s place.

Movement II: “Ulysses”
The second movement, “Ulysses,” enacts Kafka’s parable “The Silence of the Sirens,” based on Homer’s tale from the Odyssey. Kafka presents a unique, alternative theory regarding the nature of the musical torment inflicted by the deadly Sirens upon the sailors’ ears: he maintains that even more lethal than their song was, in fact, their punishing interruptions of silence. I gravitated toward this story in part as it presented the perfect opportunity to explore the breathtakingly seductive lyrical quality of the theremin, awakened when given the opportunity to sing melodically. I also sought to instate a self-challenge as a composer: to create an atmosphere so unsettlingly beautiful as to tantalize the listener, the Sirens’ melody (and corresponding leitmotif) interrupted at odd moments with increasingly deafening silences. Finally, after the most climactic—and ecstatic—expression of yearning, we hear the anguished cries of Ulysses (along with the introduction and development of his leitmotif). The Sirens’ ultimate response, of mystery and irresolution, is in the form of a loop canon in two voices (as the Sirens were a pair). We are left alone, facing our own silence with an etereal high F.

Movement III: “Fugal Horn”
Our trance is interrupted by the third movement, “Fugal Horn,” a romping, scherzando fugue that degenerates into the final type of “siren” presented in this concerto: an alarm, evoked by the wide glissando effect that is one of the instrument’s trademarks (not unlike the orchestral “siren” utilized frequently by composers of the early-mid-20th century, notably Varese). This “Thera-fugue” is based upon the following leitmotifs: “THEREMIN” (as fugue subject), “DALIT” (as countersubject #1), and “CLARA” (as countersubject #2). A large crescendo leads to a climactic standoff between theremin and orchestra, as the two entities parry back and forth in dramatic, widely spanned glissandi. They finally join forces, as a “meta-theremin,” playing the “thera-fugue” subject, disguised via large, swooping octave displacements, in complete unison. After a climactic shriek on high F (the ultimate alarm, or horn!), we are catapulted down to a last resolution on the original tonal center of the piece (the note B), above which leitmotifs bearing the composer’s name (excepting one last wink from the C-minor “KGB” leitmotif) sign off the work. Finally, leitmotifs based upon my own signature conclude the piece.

Many thanks to the Guggenheim Foundation, which provided me the Fellowship that enabled composition of this work. Sirens is dedicated in memoriam to Clara Rockmore.

— Dalit Warshaw, August 2019
KURT WEILL (1900-1950)
Kleine Dreigroschenmusik (Little Threepenny Music) (1929)

Kurt Weill’s career began under the promising auspices of the Weimar Republic. In this way, like few others Weill’s name is synonymous with the Twenties. Mixing leftist politics with the cabaret and concert fashions of his day, Weill is best known for his collaboration with playwright and poet Bertolt Brecht. The two would be pivotal in producing works that would set the mold for a new type of musical theater, one that entertained their audience as much as challenged them with a “social purpose.”

The Threepenny Opera is the best known product of their partnership, a recasting of John Gay’s 18th-century English ballad opera, The Beggar’s Opera, as translated by Elisabeth Hauptmann. Tonight’s version of Weill’s music, Little Threepenny Opera, is a suite arrangement by Weill for wind orchestra. Ironically, Brecht’s Marxism would prove too much for Weill’s more permissive socialism, ending their working together shortly thereafter in 1930. According to his wife Lotte Lenya, Weill was not able to please Brecht’s political sensibilities, about which Weill would jokingly say that he was unable to “set the communist party manifesto to music.” Soon after In 1933, Weill was forced to flee Nazi Germany after finding out his name was on an arrest list. He was an obvious target and an early one at that. Born a cantor’s son, Weill’s profile as a leftist Jewish artist would have won him no votes from the rising fascist regime.

His stance against Wagner, a favorite of the fascist Führer, probably did not help. For Weill, The Threepenny Opera was a “most consistent reaction to Wagner and the aristocratic history of the opera itself,” one which critic and musicologist Hans Keller cleverly called “the weightiest possible lowbrow opera for highbrows and the most full-blooded highbrow musical for lowbrows.” Weill himself explained in 1929 that “[i]f the framework of opera is unable to withstand the impact of the age, then this framework must be destroyed … In the Dreigroschenoper, reconstruction was possible insofar as here we had a chance of starting from scratch,” claiming that the “music cannot further the action of the play or create its background”, but achieves its proper value only when music serves to interrupt the theatrical action at the proper moments. In this way, The Threepenny Opera is a mixed form, which blended spoken theater and popular musical idioms with the trappings of operatic tradition.

This hybrid form is what has made The Threepenny Opera’s popularity so enduring over the last century. The work is liminal in nature, existing at the threshold of “low” and “high” aesthetics, a parody of operatic convention that mixes late Romantic lyricism with folkish street sense. While there is something Mahlerian about Weill’s combinatorial sensibilities, Weill seems to bring this mission to its logical conclusion. Going beyond Mahler, Weill’s inspiration from “lowbrow” traditions often seems to win out over any sense of high-society stuffiness. The sound of the streets dictates the proceedings here, and rarely the other way around. The craft of the concert composer serves to temper the noise of bar song and cabaret stage, but never to sap its raw essence or simply to appropriate it into high-art context.

The Threepenny Opera premiered on August 31, 1928. It was an instant smash hit, establishing Weill as one of the most successful composers of Weimar Germany and inter-war Europe. The work was so successful, in fact, that it received an adaptation in the early days of the burgeoning “sound film” era by director Georg Wilhelm Pabst in 1931. And while the plot is changed significantly by Pabst (mostly notably only some of the songs being used), the adaptation stands as an undeniable classic in early film. Like in the Weill-Brecht original, the musical numbers are carefully poised around the spoken word, often in a diatonic fashion as music originates from sound sources within the film’s own world.

The soul of the plot of The Threepenny Opera is the humanity of its characters, despite and perhaps sometimes even because of their criminality. Even Jackie “Tiger” Brown, the corrupt police chief, is little threat to Mack’s criminal enterprising, as he is also one of Mack’s oldest friends from their army days in India. Through the lens of the Twenties, however, Mack and Jackie’s status as veterans would have spoken loudly to the latest wave of soldiers, recently come home from World War I. Many of these veterans demonstrated symptoms of “shell shock,” unable to fit into the normal structures of society, suffering from what we call post-traumatic stress disorder. We are left to wonder if Mack’s experience of war has anything to do with the creation of his nefarious persona as a gang boss nicknamed “the Knife.” Of course, it would not be Weill-Brecht without the ambiguity, so the possibility haunts their camaraderie. We are all heroes, we are all villains.

JOHN ALDEN CARPENTER
Skyscrapers, complete ballet score (1926)

The satirist Juvenal, writing at the time of the early Roman empire, lamented the plight of the shoddy giant tenement housing projects called insulae. While these early projects did not achieve the great heights accomplished by the modern era’s high-rise buildings, there is a recognition of the failure of our own architectural projects in them. But in the Twenties, skyscrapers represented a new kind of life, a space for the new hopes explicit in rising urbanization across the country. At the end of the 19th century, Major William Le Baron Jenney had created a load-bearing structural frame, leading to the “Chicago skeleton” design. John Alden Carpenter was growing up in this landscape, his artistic psyche permeated and primed for musical exploration of this evocative new architectural design.

John Alden Carpenter was born in the Chicago suburb of Park Ridge on February 28, 1876. Educated at Harvard University under the tutelage of John Knowles Paine, Carpenter would continue his promise as a composer, traveling to Europe to study with Edward Elgar in Rome in 1906. Upon returning to his home city, the composer would study with German-American Bernhard Zeinth, a major (albeit largely forgotten) contributor to musical culture in pre-war Chicago. There Carpenter would remain, supporting his compositional career with the family business, a shipping supply company.

For Carpenter, the skyscraper was as a portrait of “the many rhythmic movements and sounds of modern American life,” an ambitious melting-pot of multiculturalism that could translate into music. Written a handful of years after the success of Krazy Kat, Carpenter demonstrates with 1926’s Skyscrapers a style that had by that time soaked up more of the jazz craze of the era. This time, instead of a “jazz pantomime,” this new ballet bore the subtitle “A Ballet of Modern American Life.” The work is cosmopolitan in flavor, freely mixing the idioms of blues and ragtime with concert-music modernism, including bi-tonal harmonies, asymmetric rhythms, collage textures, not to mention the addition of more folk and jazz instrumentation to the orchestra. If this sounds like the music of Igor Stravinsky, it may come as no surprise that Carpenter had originally begun Skyscrapers as a commission for Serge Diaghilev in Paris, where the Russian-born composer had reached international fame.

Yet, not all is “wine and roses” with Carpenter’s conception of his skyscraper ballet. He described the skyscraper in his music as “huge and sinister … a stark and ominous skeleton of black and red.” There is a violence to urban lifestyle, which Carpenter exploits using brass to bleat like the horns of early automobiles. Pianos and xylophone “pound the pavement” like commuters going to and from work, ready for a night of entertainment at the many speakeasies and jazz clubs. Horns introduce a respite from the bustling of this city-noir, culminating in what Carpenter calls the “Song of the Skyscraper.” Leaving the streets to take in the sights for awhile, the music takes a vaudeville turn, which Carpenter describes as an “exaggeration of the Coney Island type of American amusement park, complete with all its gay and tawdry trappings and a preposterous moon.”

Snippets and quotes of songs like Stephen Foster’s “Massa’s in the Cold Cold Ground,” “When You Ain’t Got No Money Well You Needn’t Come Around,” and “Yankee Doodle” pepper the music in a lively way. A strange surreal dream sequence follows, depicting a sleeping janitor who fantasizes a chorus of a “Africanist” made-up language, which Carpenter intended as a “throw-back to … plantation life: ‘Manola Bola, manola monabolos.’” This leaning on exoticism is, of course, a problematic one that litters a great deal of repertoire of twentieth century music. Our twenty-first century sensibilities may find this representation of African culture questionable, if not outright inappropiate; nor would we be wrong. There is hope in our disdain, simply because we have made some headway in the way we are beginning to see ourselves appropriating other cultures to revitalize our own. However, the key may be with the sleeping janitor. Like cartoonist George Herriman’s erased identity, perhaps the janitor—his ancestors having been stolen from Africa—can only dream of a homeland that he has never experienced. There is a kind of sad hope there, in this working-class imagination, a sense that what has been lost can indeed be regained, if only for the duration of a fleeting nap. The janitor’s dream is problematic in the same way that the promise of the American Dream is, whose meritocracy may be an illusion in the end. But as the transformative power of the blues and its ability to process cruelty and misfortune continued to morph into the jazz during the Twenties, so did this ability to find the humanity amongst the cruel streets and indifferent towering structures of emerging modern life in the early twentieth century filter into American concert music via the works of composer like John Alden Carpenter.

Clifton Ingram is a Boston-based composer, performer (Rested Field, guitars/electronics), and writer interested in the fault lines between contemporary and historical traditions. He holds degrees in music (composition) and classics from Skidmore College and The Boston Conservatory.

---

GUEST ARTIST

CAROLINA EYCK (THEREMIN) is a German-Sorbian musician and composer, largely recognized as the world’s leading theremin virtuoso. Carolina Eyck was a child prodigy, beginning her studies at age seven with Lydia Kavina and developing her own eight-finger position playing technique by age 16. She published The Art of Playing the Theremin, which teaches her technique, at just 17 years old. Her method is now being used by thereminists around the world and has revolutionized how the instrument is played.

As a soloist and chamber musician, Eyck has given concerts worldwide, and has collaborated with Heinz Holliger, Robert Kolinsky, Gerhard Oppitz, the conductors Andrey Boreyko, Michael Sanderling, Gürer Ayclal, John Storgårds and Brad Lubman. She has been a soloist with the Berlin Radio Symphony Orchestra, Brussels Philharmonic, Argentine National Symphony Orchestra, the Dresden Philharmonic, the Bern Symphony Orchestra, the Lapland Chamber Orchestra, and the Heidelberg Symphonic Orchestra.

She has performed in concert halls around the world, including Walt Disney Concert Hall in Los Angeles, the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington D.C., MONA (Museum of New and Old Art) Tasmania, Konzerthaus Berlin, Bozar Brussels, Rudolfinum in Prague, Großes Festspielhaus Salzburg, Centro Cultural Kirchner (CCK) Buenos Aires, Teatro Nacional de Guatemala, and Centro Gabriela Mistral Santiago, Chile. Concerts for theremin and orchestra have been written for Eyck by composers including Kalevi Aho, Andrew Norman, and Regis Campo. She was also featured in the premiere of Fazil Say’s Universe and Mesopotamia Symphonies.

In 2016, Carolina Eyck began touring her innovative solo Theremin & Voice program. Employing loops and a variety of sound effects, she develops whole choirs onstage and extends the theremin’s color palette. By singing without lyrics, voice and theremin merge symbiotically and can no longer be distinguished from each other. Eyck’s newest album, Elegies for Theremin & Voice, features her original compositions and improvisations and was released in September in connection with the 100th anniversary of the invention of the theremin.

She enjoys collaborating with contemporary artists from a variety of genres, and has performed or recorded with rock legend Steve Vai, singersongwriter Gotye, DJ Jeff Mills, guitarist Jim Moginie, Tangerine Dream, multiinstrumentalist Jacob Collier, and vocalist Theo Bleckmann, among others. Eyck has also performed in a duo with pianist and composer Christopher Tarnow since 2013, producing two records. She was awarded the Echo Klassik Prize for “Concert Recording of the Year” in 2015. In 2016, she released an album featuring her own composition Fantasias for Theremin and String Quartet with the American Contemporary Music Ensemble.

Carolina Eyck regularly conducts theremin workshops, lectures, and master classes worldwide. She is the artistic director of the Theremin Academy in Colmar (France), Leipzig, and Berlin (Germany). In 2018, she gave a TEDx Talk about the symbiosis of self-control
ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

GIL ROSE is a conductor helping to shape the future of classical music. His dynamic performances and many recordings have garnered international critical praise.

In 1996, Mr. Rose founded the Boston Modern Orchestra Project (BMOP), the foremost professional orchestra dedicated exclusively to performing and recording symphonic music of the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Under his leadership, BMOP’s unique programming and high performance standards have attracted critical acclaim.

As a guest conductor on both the opera and symphonic platforms, he made his Tanglewood debut in 2002 and in 2003 debuted with the Netherlands Radio Symphony at the Holland Festival. He has led the American Composers Orchestra, Warsaw Philharmonic, National Symphony Orchestra of the Ukraine, Cleveland Chamber Symphony, Orchestra della Svizzera Italiana, and the National Orchestra of Porto. In 2015, he made his Japanese debut substituting for Seiji Ozawa at the Matsumoto Festival conducting Berlioz’s Béatrice et Bénédict, and in March 2016 made his debut with New York City Opera at the Appel Room at Jazz at Lincoln Center.

Over the past decade, Mr. Rose has also built a reputation as one of the country’s most inventive and versatile opera conductors. He recently announced the formation of Odyssey Opera, an inventive company dedicated to presenting eclectic operatic repertoire in a variety of formats. The company debuted in September 2013 to critical acclaim with a 6-hour concert production of Wagner’s Rienzi, and has continued on to great success with masterworks in concert, an annual fully-staged festival, and contemporary and family-friendly operas. Prior to founding Odyssey Opera he led Opera Boston as its Music Director starting in 2003, and in 2010 was appointed the company’s first Artistic Director. Mr. Rose led Opera Boston in several American and New England premieres including Shostakovich’s The Nose, Donizetti’s Maria Padilla, Hindemith’s Cardillac, and Peter Eötvös’s Angels in America. In 2009, Mr. Rose led the world premiere of Zhou Long’s Madame White Snake, which won the Pulitzer Prize for Music in 2011.

Mr. Rose and BMOP recently partnered with the American Repertory Theater, Chicago Opera Theater, and the MIT Media Lab to create the world premiere of composer Tod Machover’s Death and the Powers (a runner-up for the 2012 Pulitzer Prize in Music). He conducted this seminal multimedia work at its world premiere at the Opera Garnier in Monte Carlo, Monaco, in September 2010, and also led its United States premiere in Boston and a subsequent performance at Chicago Opera Theater.

An active recording artist, Gil Rose serves as the executive producer of the BMOP/sound recording label. His extensive discography includes world premiere recordings of music by John Cage, Lukas Foss, Charles Fussell, Michael Gandolfi, Tod Machover, Steven Mackey, Evan Ziporyn, and many others on such labels as Albany, Arsis, Chandos, ECM, Naxos, New World, and BMOP/sound.

He has led the longstanding Monadnock Music Festival in historic Peterborough, NH, since his appointment as Artistic Director in 2012, conducting several premieres and making his opera stage directing debut in two revivals of operas by Dominick Argento, as well as conducting, directing and producing the world premier recording of Ned Rorem’s opera Our Town.

He has curated the Fromm Concerts at Harvard three times and served as the first curator of the Ditson Festival of Music at Boston’s Institute of Contemporary Art. As an educator Mr. Rose served five years as director of Orchestral Activities at Tufts University and in 2012 he joined the faculty of Northeastern University as Artist-in-Residence and Professor of Practice.

In 2007, Mr. Rose was awarded Columbia University’s prestigious Ditson Award as well as an ASCAP Concert Music Award for his exemplary commitment to new American music. He is a three-time Grammy Award nominee.
The Tudors 2019/20 Season

ODYSSEY OPERA

PACINI
MARIA, REGINA D'INGHILTERRA
NOVEMBER 4+3, 2019
HUNTINGTON AVENUE THEATRE

ROSSINI
ELISABETTA, REGINA D'INGHILTERRA
MARCH 13+15, 2020
HUNTINGTON AVENUE THEATRE

BRITTEN
GLORIANA
APRIL 11, 2020
NGC'S JORDAN HALL

GERMAN
MERRIE ENGLAND
JUNE 5 & 7, 2020
HUNTINGTON AVENUE THEATRE

JOIN THE JOURNEY BY CALLING 617.826.1626 OR VISIT ODYSSEYOPERA.ORG

New England Philharmonic
Innovation & Tradition in Concert

2019/2020
SEASON
RICHARD PITTMAN
MUSIC DIRECTOR

Left Dreaming
OCTOBER 26, 2019 8PM

Hilary Purrington Above the last cloud
2019 CALL FOR SCORES WINNER, FIRST BOSTON PERFORMANCE

Gunther Schuller The Past is in the Present

Maurice Ravel Concerto for the Left Hand
Jeffrey Swann, piano

Hannah Lash God Music Bug Music
FIRST BOSTON PERFORMANCE

Arnold Schoenberg Five Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 16

BOSTON UNIVERSITY'S TSAI PERFORMANCE CENTER
TICKETS ON SALE NEPHILHARMONIC.ORG

Celebrating 25 Years
LEXINGTON SYMPHONY
JONATHAN MCPHEE MUSIC DIRECTOR

Oct 5 Poetic Expressions
Beethoven | Zhang Jiping | Tchaikovsky
Wu Man, Pipa

Nov 9 & 10 A Celebration of Life
Orff
The Master Singers of Lexington & Lexington High School Chorus

Dec 6 & 8 Holiday Pops
Lexington Children's Choir

Feb 15 Conquering New Lands
Dvořák | Beethoven
Jennifer Kloetzel, Cello

March 28 Imagination Takes Flight
Marsh | Wagner | Mussorgsky | Stravinsky

May 2 & 3 Spring Pops
Music for the entire family

Pickman Hall at the Longy School of Music at Bard College
27 Garden Street, Cambridge
JOIN US FOR SEASON 20!
Thursday, November 7 2019, 7:30pm
2, 4, 6, 8 = twenty

Featuring metalsmith Rhea Vedro
Pianists Marilyn Horne, Sarah Bob, Donald Berman, and Geoffrey Burleson

World premieres by deVon Gray, Stefanie Lukowski,
and an eight hand work by Davel Nakowski

"Saddlebird" by Rhea Vedro
www.newgalleryconcertseries.org

"...a hardly and supremely necessary Boston institution that focuses on newly made music and visual art."
National Sawdust

Cary Hall, Lexington, MA | 781-523-9009 | www.lexingtonsymphony.org
Juventas New Music Ensemble
Oliver Caplan | Artistic Director

Roots & Wings
October 26, 2019, 7:30 pm
First Church Boston

Music from Juventas’s early years paired with pieces by the same composers today.

Tickets at juventasmusic.org

Chameleon Arts Ensemble Season 22-23
Transforming experiences in chamber music to begin...

Saturday, October 12, 2019, 8 PM
Saturday, October 19, 2019, 4 PM
First Church in Boston

Gustav Mahler Piano Quartet in a minor
Jeremy Gill “and everywhere the sea for clarinet & piano – world premiere
Leos Janáček Mladi (Youth) suite for wind sextet, JWV710
Ludwig van Beethoven Violin Sonata No. 5 in F Major, Op. 24 “Spring”
Darius Milhaud La création du monde–Suite for piano quintet, Op. 81b

www.chameleonarts.org • 617-427-8200

Genelec
The sonic reference

www.genelecusa.com
Genelec Inc. 7 Tech Circle. Natick. MA. 01760
tel. 508 652-0000 email: genelecusa@genelec.com

BackBayChorale
Scott Allen Jarrett | Artistic Director

Mozart & Handel Saturday, November 9
8:00 p.m. • St. Cecilia Church, Boston

A Boston Christmas
With Majestic Brass & Handel and Haydn Society Youth Chorus
Friday, December 20
7:30 p.m. • Old South Church, Boston
Saturday, December 21
4:00 p.m. • Old South Church, Boston

The Golden Age of Brass
With Dark Horse Consort
Saturday, March 7
8:00 p.m. • Emmanuel Church, Boston

Mendelssohn Elijah
Friday, May 8
8:00 p.m. • Sanders Theatre, Cambridge

2019/20 bbcbsoston.org
BMOP/sound, the label of the acclaimed Boston Modern Orchestra Project, explores the evolution of the music formerly known as classical. Its eclectic catalog offers both rediscovered classics of the 20th century and the music of today’s most influential and innovative composers. BMOP/sound gives adventurous listeners a singular opportunity to explore the music that is defining this generation and the next.

Available for purchase at bmopsound.org and in the lobby during intermission at tonight’s performance. Preview and download tracks through iTunes and all major online retailers.

BMOP/sound recordings offer superior sound quality, impeccable post-production, and distinguished packaging. In addition to receiving 2009 and 2010 Grammy Award nominations, BMOP/sound recordings have appeared on the year-end “Best of” lists of the New York Times, Time Out New York, the Boston Globe, American Record Guide, National Public Radio, NewMusicBox, Sequenza21, and Downbeat magazine.

Subscriptions available
Your subscription ensures that you will receive all of BMOP/sound’s preeminent recordings as soon as they are made available. Order now and receive:

- 12-CD subscription for $14 per CD (save 30%)
- Each new CD before official release date
- Free shipping (for international subscribers add $2/CD)
- BMOP/sound e-news

To order, call 781.324.0396 or email bmopsound@bmop.org.
Order forms are also available at the CD table in the lobby.
Give to BMOP and BMOP/sound

Ticket revenue accounts for a fraction of the expense of BMOP concerts, BMOP/sound CDs, and outreach programs. The sum of many gifts of all sizes insures BMOP’s future. With your support, we will advocate for composers of all ages, bring together audiences, young and old, distribute BMOP/sound recordings to international locations, and know that today’s landmark orchestral works will remain a part of our collective memory.

BENEFITS OF GIVING INCLUDE

- Complimentary BMOP/sound CDs
- Recognition in BMOP programs and publications
- Invitation to selected BMOP rehearsals
- Invitations to receptions with composers and guest artists
- The knowledge that you are helping to sustain the present and future of orchestral music

With a gift of $1,000 or more, you become a member of the Conductor’s Circle and receive customized benefits tailored to your interests, including sponsoring artists, commissioning new works, and funding recording projects.

You may contribute in the following ways:

CALL 781.324.0396 to speak to a BMOP staff member
VISIT www.bmop.org to give through BMOP’s secure PayPal account
MAIL your donation to BMOP, 376 Washington Street, Malden, MA 02148 or:
GIVE your contribution to a BMOP staff member tonight!

For more information, please contact Sissie Siu Cohen, General Manager, at 781.324.0396 or ssiu@bmop.org.
DONORS

We gratefully acknowledge the following individuals, corporations, and foundations whose generous support has made our concerts and recordings possible. (Gifts acknowledged below were received between October 1, 2018-September 12, 2019.)

FOUNDATIONS, CORPORATIONS, AND INSTITUTIONS
Anonymous
Aaron Copland Fund for Music
The Howard and Katherine Aibel Foundation
The Alice Ditson Fund at Columbia University
The Amphion Foundation
Catherine and Paul Buttenwieser Foundation
The Ellis L. Phillips Foundation
The Evelyn Sharp Foundation
The Jebediah Foundation
League of American Orchestras
Massachusetts Cultural Council
MIT Music & Theater Arts
National Endowment for the Arts
The Wise Family Charitable Foundation

BENEFACTORS ($10,000 and above)
Anonymous
Elizabeth Boveroux
Caroline Cronson
Gil Rose
David and Marie Louise Scudder
Campbell Steward

GUARANTORS ($5,000–$9,999)
Nathalie Apchin
Chris Avery
James Barnett and Carolyn Haynes
David Lloyd Brown
Samuel and Deborah Bruskin
Marjorie and Martin Cohn
Eran Egozy
Dorothea Endicott

LEADERS ($2,500–$4,999)
Pravin Chaturvedi
Larry DeVito
Rayford Law

PATRONS ($1,000–$2,499)
John Berg
Harriet Eckstein
Thomas M. Hout
Walter Howell
Andrew and Barbara Imbrie
Sue and J.R. McNutt
Peter Parker and Susan Clare

PARTNERING MEMBERS ($500–$999)
H. Paris Burstyn
Katherine Cain
David Claman
Timothy Davis

SPONSORING MEMBERS ($250–$499)
David A. Klaus
Arthur Levering
John Loder
Arthur Mattuck
Laird Malamed
Marvin and Elsa Miller

SUPPORTING MEMBERS ($100–$249)
Larry Banks
Patricia Brady
Eric Buehrens
Eric Chasalow and Barbara Cassidy
Mary Chamberlain
Richard and Ruth Colwell
Bruce Creditor
Donald Crockett
Anthony D’Amico
Geoffrey Gibbs
Barrie Gleason
Randal Guendel

BENEFACORS ($10,000 and above)
Anonymous
Elizabeth Boveroux
Caroline Cronson
Gil Rose
David and Marie Louise Scudder
Campbell Steward

GUARANTORS ($5,000–$9,999)
Nathalie Apchin
Chris Avery
James Barnett and Carolyn Haynes
David Lloyd Brown
Samuel and Deborah Bruskin
Marjorie and Martin Cohn
Eran Egozy
Dorothea Endicott

LEADERS ($2,500–$4,999)
Pravin Chaturvedi
Larry DeVito
Rayford Law

PATRONS ($1,000–$2,499)
John Berg
Harriet Eckstein
Thomas M. Hout
Walter Howell
Andrew and Barbara Imbrie
Sue and J.R. McNutt
Peter Parker and Susan Clare

PARTNERING MEMBERS ($500–$999)
H. Paris Burstyn
Katherine Cain
David Claman
Timothy Davis

SPONSORING MEMBERS ($250–$499)
David A. Klaus
Arthur Levering
John Loder
Arthur Mattuck
Laird Malamed
Marvin and Elsa Miller

SUPPORTING MEMBERS ($100–$249)
Larry Banks
Patricia Brady
Eric Buehrens
Eric Chasalow and Barbara Cassidy
Mary Chamberlain
Richard and Ruth Colwell
Bruce Creditor
Donald Crockett
Anthony D’Amico
Geoffrey Gibbs
Barrie Gleason
Randal Guendel
Harold I. Pratt
Martha Richmond
Sheila Rizzo
Holbrook Robinson
Victor Rosenbaum
Lawrence Rosenberg
Bruce Scott and Marcia Duncan

FRIENDS  ($99 and below)
Sarah Boardman
Renata Cathou
Alexei and Laryssa Doohovskoy
Jeffrey Duryea
Scott Freije
Edward Ginsberg
Grace Gregor
Harold Lichtin

IN KIND
John Kramer
Genelec
New England Conservatory

George Stalker
Joel Stein
Ian Strasfogel
Walter Wiechetek
Beverly Woodward
Chen Yi and Zhou Long

Carol Lubkowski
Hugues Marchand
Eric Nathan
Malcolm and Mona Roberts
Diane Sokal
Peter Sulski
Gerald Zaritzky

BMOP BOARDS AND STAFF

BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Chris Avery  Co-founder, Boston Smoked Fish Co.
James Barnett  Director of Development, Genesys
Elizabeth S. Boveroux,  Vice President (retired), Eaton Vance Management
Treasurer
David Lloyd Brown
Harriett Eckstein
Walter Howell
Rayford Law
Sam Mawn-Mahlau
Gil Rose, President
Anuradha Yadav

ADVISORY BOARD

Mark DeVoto  Composer and Theorist, Tufts University
Alan Fletcher  President and CEO, Aspen Music Festival
Charles Fussell  Composer
John Harbison  Composer, MIT
John Heiss  Composer and Flutist, New England Conservatory
Joseph Horowitz  Cultural Historian, Author
John Kramer  Artist/Designer, John Kramer Design
Steven Ledbetter  Musicologist
Tod Machover  Composer and Director, Experimental Media Facility, MIT
Martin Ostrow  Producer/Director, Fine Cut Productions
Bernard Rands  Composer, Harvard University
Kay Kaufman Shelemay  Ethnomusicologist, Harvard University
Lucy Shelton  Soprano

Genelec
New England Conservatory
STAFF
Gil Rose               Artistic Director
Sissie Siu Cohen      General Manager
Stefanie Lubkowski    Development Associate
April Thibeault       Publicist
Chuck Furlong         Production Assistant
Linda Osborn          Artistic Administrator
eeWee Productions, LLC Social Media Management